DO IT NOW!

LENGTH, 170 FEET

Mr. Grouch is satisfied with his help. Everything goes too slow, so he has a sign painted "DO IT NOW" and hangs it up in his office. He then rings for the foreman of the factory. This man has long had an ill feeling toward Mr. Grouch and when after receiving a good lecture on "how to work," he discovers the sign and goes to the foreman's office. He tells him of the sign and the foreman tells Mr. Grouch of his chair. The next to come is the stenographer. She loves Mr. Grouch secretly. Seeing the sign "DO IT NOW," she puts her arms around his neck and hugs and kisses him. In his despair, Mr. Grouch takes up the waste paper basket and throws it over the floor. He then rings for the janitor. The janitor comes and orders him to clean the floor.

The office boy, ready to kill the man who invented work, notices the sign "DO IT NOW". Blaming Mr. Grouch for the work, he knocks him off the chair with his broom. This is too much for Mr. Grouch. He takes the sign off the wall, tears it in pieces and is satisfied at least for a while with the work as it is now done.
